

Help us preserve the memories from a generation at war

HUMANITIES
DIVISION

We need your help and support to raise £80,000 to run digitisation days nationwide to capture memories of the Great War passed down through your family, friends, schools, and local communities over the years.

Few families in Britain were unaffected by the War. Millions served in the conflict or transformed their lives to contribute to the war effort; most who survived lost loved ones, family and friends. Yet, on a daily basis, the sacrifice made by these men and women increasingly slips from living memory.

Once we have collected these photographs, objects, letters and personal stories, they will be made available to the public through a large, free-to-use online database which will be launched in November 2018 for the 100th anniversary of the Armistice.

Please, donate now, and preserve the stories of these men, women and children forever.

Lest we forget.
